TREASON IN COURT CIRCLES

It was the day of the inauguration of the first woman President of the United States. Each of the great parties, to attract the votes of the newly enfranchised sex, had nominated women for President and Vice President.

Miss Angelina Sinclair had been elected. Her defeated rival, burying partisan feelings in the rejoicings over the choice of a woman as President, was to be at her side during all the ceremonies. That is to say, Miss Eulalia Conroy asserted that she had buried all partisan and private feelings. But General Erastus Doncaster, Commander-in-chief of the army and in charge of the inaugural ceremonies, expressed a doubt of the fair words of the fair candidate.

"There'll be some trouble!" he declared, darkly.

"What kind of trouble?" asked those who clustered about the redoubtable warrior.

"What kind! Great Scott! What man is smart enough to predict the kind of trouble a woman will raise, and what man is fool enough to doubt that she can raise plenty? I have doubted the city garrison."

Washington was full of women. In fact, there was no room for men. All accommodations had been engaged long in advance by the women.

Miss Angelina Sinclair floated into her boudoir from the bath, redolent of exquisite perfumes. Hanging upon a frame was the most magnificent dress ever fabricated in America. The ten greatest dressmakers in the country had met in daily convalescence for two months, planning a dress that should be the supreme achievement of its kind. In its quiet elegance, in its restrained richness, in the dignified opulence of its colors, in the distinction of its cut and a certain proud sweep of its lines, it was the greatest garment ever produced in this country. It was worthy of the high office of her who was to wear it—worthy of the nation whose greatness it typified.

Miss Sinclair decided to begin dressing with the shoes. But there were no shoes in the room except a pair of villainous yellow tans. Then she encountered a new shock. The hat on the bed was not the magnificent one she had tried on last night. It was a fright of a hat! And the belt that lay with the dress was not the belt that had been there last night. It was a fright of a belt! Apprehension clutched her heart. Heavens! The switches on the bureau were not the dark-brown braids she had but lately left there! And there was no rat!

She rang for her maid. The maid came, her cheek blanching as Miss Sinclair pointed at the substitutions. "Treason! Treason!" cried the President-elect. "Quick, call up some store, some hairdresser, the police, the Secret Service! Why, I should have had barely time to dress, even if things hadn't been tampered with."

But the stores were all closed. No hairdresser could be found. Captain Durand, military aid to the new President, came to apprise her that it was time to go to the inauguration.

"Oh, I can't go in that hat!" wailed Miss Sinclair. "I won't go without a rat! I can't stand up there with all those women of the opposition looking at those shoes! I just won't go!"

Captain Durand reported to General Doncaster the amazing news that the President-elect refused to serve. They sent for the Vice President-elect. She, too, was in a state of hysteria. She refused to come.

"The old President is out," said Doncaster. "There is no Cabinet, of course, since there is no President. The Speaker of the House must qualify."

A terrible shriek went up. "A ma-an, a ma-an!" The whole multitude of women joined in.

Miss Conroy sprang upon the platform. "Sister, I will qualify. In the craven desertion by these other women, I will leap into the breach. I declare myself President!"

At that moment, when the well-laid plans of Eulalia Conroy seemed about to be successful, the voice of a jealous associate in the conspiracy was heard. "She changed Miss Sinclair's clothes and—!" The voice rose to a shriek in declaring the culmination of villainy. "She stole her rat! That is why Miss Sinclair isn't here!"

The adherents of the two candidates rushed together. But General Doncaster commanded his men to restore order. Then, in the absence of any other authority, he proclaimed martial law and declared the country under military rule until Congress could elect a President.

So the country was temporarily under the sway of military despotism. "And I don't give a darn," said the Speaker of the House, who was a mere crude man.—[Chicago News.]

CALEB POWERS MAY NOT SERVE

After All, In the American Congress.

HIS ELIGIBILITY IS QUESTIONED

Thrice Convicted of Felony
And Never Acquitted
By a Jury.

CONGRESS IS THE SOLE JUDGE

The Louisville Times says:

While Caleb Powers, thrice convicted and twice pardoned for alleged complicity in the assassination of Gov. William Goebel, has been elected to represent the Eleventh district in the Congress of the United States, which meets on March 4 next, he may, after all, fail to realize the ambition of his life, as it is said that a concerted movement will be made by the Democratic delegation from Kentucky in Congress to attack his eligibility to the seat on the ground that he has been charged and convicted of a felony and has never been acquitted by a jury.

As the next House of Representatives will be overwhelmingly Democratic, Powers is expected to have a hard row to hoe, with the chances that he will hit the toboggan after an investigation of his case. It is pointed out by prominent Democrats that although Powers was pardoned by Gov. Willson, this did not relieve him from resting under the charge of which he could only be freed by a verdict of acquittal by a jury.

Congress is the sole judge of the qualifications of its members, and Powers' fate would rest entirely with the majority. While the initiative will in all probability be taken by the Democrats from Kentucky, who feel that the State will be disgraced by having as a Representative in the American Congress a man charged with and three times convicted of being a party to the blackest crime in the history of the State, it is also said that many Republicans feel that it would do their party irretrievable harm to allow Powers to retain his seat under such circumstances.

While Powers holds the distinction of being twice pardoned, the first, issued by W. S. Taylor a few days after the assassination, was held null and void by the court. He received a free and full pardon at the hands of Gov. Willson last year, which it is held by some has the same effect as an acquittal. However, it is pointed out that the whole matter rests with Congress to determine, from which there can be no appeal.

Col. Bennett H. Young was asked by a Times representative to-day whether a law existed making it possible to prevent a man charged with felony from occupying a seat in Congress, to which Col. Young replied:

"There may be such a statute, but I do not recall it just now. However, Congress has the authority to eject from its body any person considered, for any reason whatsoever, unfit to hold so honorable a position, and my opinion is that Caleb Powers should be put out."
